The German guests who took part in the inauguration of the North Pacific Railway have since their return to Germany held a meeting, voted an address to Mr. Henry Villard, and agreed to meet at Berlin once a year in commemoration of their journey.

Didn't Steal.

"Gentlemen," said an Arkansaw Colonel as he stood under the limb of a tree from which depended a rope, "I must protest my innocence. I did not steal the mule. I am above petty theft. I know that you all have the interest of the community at heart, and I do not blame you; but there are times when we are all liable to be too rash. If I had stolen the mule my guilt would oppress me until I would beg to be put out of the world in the most summary way." "The mule was found in your posession," said the leader of the mob. "Very true, my dear sir."

"Did he jump into your lot?" "No, sir; I conducted him to the confines of my premises." "Did you buy the animal?"

"No, sir." "Did you trade for him?"

"I did not." "Then you stole him. Let down the ope, boys."

"Gentlemen, I hope you will give ne a chance to explain. The mule in question was the property of our distinguished fellow-citizen, Major Ruglesbery. Some time ago the Major and I exchanged a few words of an uncomplimentary nature. I intimated that the Major's blood would be highly satisfactory to me, and the Major said that my gore would please him mightily. Well, we separated, thoroughly agreeing with each other. The next day the Major and I met. I got what is vulgarly called the drop on him, and relieved him of the top of his head. He was riding a mule at the time, and when he fell off I saw that he no longer had any practical use for the animal. Now, if I had dismounted in the way he did I should have interposed no objection to the Major's taking my horse." "I hope, sir, that you will excuse us," said the leader of the mob. "We thought that you stole the mule. Your explanation is most satisfactory, and hope you'll excuse us. Let us all take a drink."-Arkansaw Traveler.

> The idea of telegraphing from ships at sea is not a new one, and crops up from time to time. Mid-ocean telegraph stations have been proposed. and will probably be carried out some day. The chief difficulty in the way of their adoption has hitherto been the necessity of keeping the ship connected by a branch cable to the main cable lying on the bottom, and anchoring her so as to maintain this communication in all weathers and depths desirable. But Professor A. E. Dolbear has proposed a plan which may render this fixed communication unnecessary. A large metal plate attached to an insulated conductor is lowered from the ship to the bottom on the track of the cable and another plale is merely submerged. Between these two plates a battery and Morse key is inserted. On working the key the Morse currents induce other currents in the cable, which can be heard in telephones attached to the cable on shore .- Engineering.
